Komodo National Park

The Realm of Dragons and Rich Marine Life

Komodo National Park, designated as a UNESCO World Heritage site, covers an expansive area of 1,733 square kilometers within Indonesia's Lesser Sunda Islands. Renowned for being the natural habitat of the Komodo the world's largest lizard-the park is a treasure trove of diverse wildlife and striking landscapes, ranging from arid savannas to lush tropical forests.

The park also boasts a rich marine ecosystem featuring over 1,000 species of fish and 260 types of coral.

It is a prime location for encountering manta rays and sea turtles, making it a premier destination for diving and snorkeling enthusiasts. Visitors can explore the park's three principal islands-Komodo, Rinca, and Padar-each offering spectacular vistas, secluded beaches, and unparalleled opportunities to observe unique wildlife.
